

Yazmin Aguilar Carretero is a Government Relations and Policy Analyst at the Washington State Board of Education with more than a decade of experience in nonprofit leadership, civic engagement and public policy. In her current role, she leads legislative strategy and contributes to the development of education policy, working at the intersection of government, community and institutional leadership to advance equitable access to opportunity. Prior to her work in state government, Yazmin held leadership roles in the nonprofit sector focused on expanding civic participation and strengthening community-centered initiatives. Her approach to public service is grounded in intellectual curiosity, reflection and a commitment to democratic engagement. Outside of her professional work, she is an avid reader and cyclist who values disciplines that encourage both personal reflection and endurance. As a mother, she remains deeply committed to strengthening public institutions for future generations.
